Description:	Luxardo's second historical speciality after Maraschino Originale. It is a liqueur of marasca cherries (a sour cherry variety exclusively cultivated by Luxardo) - a variant of cherry brandy. It is obtained by the infusion of marasca juice, matured in oak vats. Luxardo cherry liqueur was renamed with the curious name of Sangue Morlacco (Morlacco blood) by the poet Gabriele D'Annunzio in 1919, at the time of the Fiume military expedition, due to its dark red colour while "Morlacco" derived from the name of warrior people of the Dalmatian hinterland.

Characteristics:	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Colour: dark red.• Aroma: intense, inebriating perfume of marasca.• Taste: good body, very rounded on the palate. Quite different from normal cherry-brandies, both through the intensity of the cherry's typical taste (here decidedly enhanced), and through the surprising expansion of the after-taste, which makes it priceless when combined with pure chocolate.

Packaging:	Round black bottle, with black capsule; the label shows D'Annunzio's signature in connection with the liqueur's "baptism". The back label contains some serving suggestions and the required legal information.
